209 Vodka

San Francisco's own No. 209 to the rescue. Like the first-ever kosher-for-Passover gin on the market, which 209 released in 2010, their foray into the vodka market is distilled from sugarcane. While it seems intuitive that vodka made from grapes or potatoes would also suffice, because the distilleries that make these products may also make grain-based spirits, they are not deemed worthy (those particles tend to float around and then the next thing you know, you've accidentally broken your covenant with God). At 209, Rabbis from the Orthodox Union inspect the still, supervise the process and provide their stamp of approval (literally: look for the "U" with a circle around it). Your Cost: $29.99
